

News, Oct 20th 2007

Lucio Salvatore's success in Italy is spreading overseas – the young Artist is invited to show his paintings in New York.

The artist who is famous for painting with blood and fire, will make his debut in the heart New York this fall – he lands in the City after the successes in Milan, Rio de Janeiro and St Barths.

The Opening will be November 12th, 7 Mercer St, during the contemporary art auctions when the most important collectors from all around the world will meet in to determine the new trends in the art world – this will be a good opportunity for the young artist who has been elected by critics one of the most important Italian talents, to show his work to the most international public.

This season the selling price records of Warhol, Rothco – exhibiting these days at the Palazzo delle Esposizioni in Rome – and Basquait, are dragging to a rise also the quotations of younger artists like Salvatore.

After New York, Salvatore Paintings will fly to St. Barthelemy (Caribbean Island) where Salvatore will exhibit for the third consecutive year in To-B-Art Gallery, Gustavia.